United Way out to reach new target

For three years the goal has been out of reach but organizers hope for change

BY JOHNNIE BACHUSKY
Review Staff

Last week's United Way Central Alberta kickoff to its 2012 fundraising campaign began with plenty of optimism, splash and a new catchy slogan, "Change starts here."

There was even a bouncy "Jump Start" PowerPoint presentation to show that generosity is still alive and well in the region, and that many companies are already mobilizing their resources to help the needy.

Organizers at the Sept. 13 Red Deer kickoff announced that $151,565 has been raised to date.

The overall goal this year is to collect $1,990,000, a goal $30,000 higher than last year and almost $55,000 less than what was ultimately raised.

"There were some concerns around the table we haven't met the goals in the last few years. This year they are trying to make sure they do make the goal," said Buck Buchanan, co-chair of this year's campaign. "We think it is very doable, and hopefully we can exceed that. Administration did not want another year of disappointment for the staff and the community that they didn't quite reach what they were trying to do."

United Way Central Alberta has not been able to reach its fundraising target for three consecutive years. In 2009, the goal was $2,103,103 but only $1,840,707 was raised. The following year the goal was an even $2 million but the agency collected $1,902,737. And last year the goal was $1,960,000. Fundraising fell short at $1,935,263.

Buchanan admitted the economy has hurt with some "burps and hiccups." He also said the organization has discovered that there are 50 per cent less companies and people that are donating the same amount of money they used to. He said it is essential to get those people back to contribute.

"They have some issues over the past couple of years but in a lot of instances maybe we have taken them for granted. A lot of times it is just the ask. If you can get out and make the ask maybe we can possibly get them back," said Buchanan. "Some of the companies we have been talking to have been suggesting they are inundated. A lot of the bigger guys are saying we are trying to get down to two or three charities of choice and that way we can maintain our sustainability for United Way."

Last year United Way invested in 37 groups and organizations throughout central Alberta, including $22,660 to the Sundre & District Nutrition For Learning Society and another $6,000 to Sundre's Greenwood Neighbourhood Place.

United Way officials also point out there have been an additional $99,815 in investments for the southern region of central Alberta, including the communities of Bowden, Butte, Dickson, Innisfail, James River Bridge, Markerville, Olds, Penhold, Spruce View, Stauffer, Sundre, Torrington, Trochu, Westward Ho, and Wimbome.

Some of the programs being offered in this region include program materials for the new family centre in Innisfail, summer camp programs for vulnerable children and youth, a 24-hour crisis line, counselling services and educational programs for any individual who has experienced sexual abuse, support for several marginalized populations (citizens with visual impairments, and schizophrenia) to live a more inclusive life in Central Alberta, and aboriginal elder support services.

Officials also note that while these communities, as well as Didsbury and Carstairs, are not now member communities many of their residents do access services in agencies from member municipalities that are funded by United Way Central Alberta, like the Red Deer-based Central Alberta Safe Harbour Society, Canadian National Institute for the Blind, and the Central Alberta Sexual Assault Support Centre.

Co-chair John Knoch encouraged the crowd of about 500 at the campaign kickoff to create change in the community by giving and volunteering, and that the impact is made throughout Central Alberta.

He noted more than 107,000 people were helped in the region by programs and services supported by United Way.

"Administration did not want another year of disappointment for the staff and the community that they didn't quite reach what they were trying to do."

After school program receives generous donation

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

The Didsbury Out of School Care Association (DOSCA) got a financial boost last Tuesday.

Amy and Shaun Waite donated the proceeds of a recent golf fundraiser - just under $2,400 - to the after school program.

Shaun Waite, who owns A Gallery of Floors in Olds, speaks very highly of the program, which his daughter attends at Ross Ford Elementary after school.

"We've been supporting DOSCA for six years," said Waite, "and we believe it's a very worthwhile program that's very important to working parents and single parents."

The charity golf tournament, an annual event held the weekend after the September long weekend, has been running for eight years, he said. This is the sixth year that the proceeds have gone to DOSCA.

"This year we've raised $2,384.50," said Waite, "and that brings our total to date to $14,415.99 (for DOSCA)."

The tournament was originally created to support local programs, and two years after its inception, DOSCA was brought to Waite's attention.

The program, which he said is full to capacity with 60 children enrolled, plays a vital part in the community.

"It's getting harder (to be a parent)," he said. "Everyone's lives are getting way more hectic, and kids are going to school at 8:30 and they're done at what, 3:15?"

"What's a kid to do between 3:15 and when the parents get off work at 5, 5:30? They can't go to day-care."

He said the program provides a safe learning environment for kids to be in while their parents work. The students participate in arts and crafts, and play games and sports.

"We really believe in the program, plus, we're working parents, and unfortunately work doesn't stop at 3:15."

The money raised, he noted, will go towards sports equipment, board games, and to take kids to special events.

"It's a program that is definitely needed," he said, "and could use more support to be better utilized by the community."

Area authors taking flight with new book

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

Area writers were celebrated Friday during the launch of the book Take Flight: True Stories of How Dreams Shape Our Lives at the Didsbury library.

Laura Crowe, who edited and published the book, described it as "a collection of true short stories that are written by other people. I have one essay and one short story in there and there's 13 short stories and 14 authors."

The launch party attracted an attendance of about 90-100 people, according to Crowe. At the event, authors - mostly unpublished up to now - were given a chance to read excerpts of their stories and visit with the community.

Crowe said she got the idea from an acquaintance of hers.

She had expressed interest in starting a magazine and her friend suggested she try something in the form of a book instead.

"So I made a workshop called 'Publish Your Unique Short Story,' and that was mostly to help authors figure out what kind of story they'd like to write, and which part of their life they'd like to write."

Authors were asked to aim to write 2,500 words.

"A lot of the authors were thinking that they had no idea what to write about," said Crowe, "and once they started writing, they had no idea how to stop. So it was my job as the editor to help them pare down what the actual core of the story was."

Now that the book is finished and printed, Crowe must market it.

She said it is available on her website, and authors have also bought books to sell to people they know.

Her next step is to get the copy into an e-reader format, as well as contact

Amazon, Chapters, libraries, and other bookstores.

One of the attractions of the book, she said, is that there's a variety of styles and stories, as well as funny and serious subject matter.

"They're all so different, so most people find something they like in it."

Crowe said one of the most enjoyable things about the project was seeing how the first drafts evolved into what they are now.

"That's probably the major reward for me," she noted, "and the secondary reward is the excitement of the authors seeing the finished product and seeing their names in print and riding the wave of their excitement, which was also why I wanted to do the project in the first place."

Crowe indicated that she is interested in doing a similar project, possibly in fiction.

Putting the 'fun' in fundraising

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

Proceeds from a festival held at Chinook Winds Christian Centre Saturday will be put towards an international relief project.

Cathy Jackson, who belongs to the church, helped organize the event, which was put together to raise funds for Project Roret, a mission project in Kenya.

"We had a great turnout and managed to raise over $2,000 for Project Roret," said Jackson.

The event, she added, was organized and staffed by volunteers, so 100 per cent of the money raised will go directly to the project.

"We had a variety of bouncy tents, carnival games and face painting provided by the Giggle Gang as well as a variety of different contests."

Among the contests were pie tasting, jam tasting, and even a Lego building contest. Didsbury mayor Brian Wittal judged all three. The pie and jam contest winners received ribbons and the Lego contest winners got Lego sets.

"We had over 10 kids compete in the (pie eating) contest and around four or five teens and adults," said Jackson. "A couple of the kids could have given the adults a run for their money."

The event had a dunk tank whose "victims" included Mayor Wittal, the local credit union manager, local pastors Colin Creighton and Corey Kope, and Bubbles the clown.

"Luckily the weather held out for us," she said. "It was a great day and we hope to do it all again next year."

Another attraction of the event was the African art sale; things that were previously brought back from Kenya were on display for sale inside the church.

"Which besides raising money for the project," Jackson noted, "also supports some local artisans around the village and in the Kibera slums outside Nairobi."

Project Roret, she said, is an ongoing mission in a village outside Nakuru in the southwestern region of Kenya. The aim of the mission is to build a school, a public health clinic and drill a well for the village.

Colts raring to start season

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

The Mountainview Colts played their first game against Three Hills last Friday, one of the last pre-season games.

This is Gord Olson's third year coaching the team and he is positive about the coming season.

"Hopefully the team has the same success as we had last year," said Olson. "Overall, through the league and in the playoffs."

Last year, the Colts made it to the north division final and lost the game to Blackfalds.

Team members range in age from 16-21, said Olson, with a bevy of new players vying for a spot on the roster.

"We had a few players leave and we got probably eight to 10 new players this year. There's some positive young players coming out so it looks really good for us."

He said the team hasn't had much practice so far, but they did go to some camps and exhibition games.

Cuts will be decided on this week.

Gord Olson said that this season, Reg Olson and Mike Clark will be assistant coaching. Barry Dickau is in charge of practice and the team manager is Don Edwards.

Opinion

Editorial Celebrating Peter Lougheed's legacy

The man who described himself as a Canadian first and an Albertan second but who will be remembered as a champion for this province passed away last week.

VICTORIA

On Sept. 12, Peter Lougheed passed away in Calgary. He leaves behind a hospital and a park named after him and a political legacy that's being acknowledged across the political spectrum as condolences pour in.

The man that ushered in the Progressive Conservative dynasty in 1971 was remembered by Alberta's NDP leader Brian Mason as someone who worked to make sure Albertans got a fair deal, to improve the education system and to encourage a fairer society.

"Peter Lougheed fought for Alberta and was a tremendous builder of our province," Mason's press release reads.

Premier Alison Redford was endorsed by Lougheed and considered him a mentor.

"He created a direction for Alberta that we can all be proud of today," read Redford's remarks. She went on to say that Lougheed's visions allowed for the economic development of the oil sands, the creation of the Heritage Savings Trust Fund and further development of arts and culture in Alberta.

These are only a couple of examples of remarks made by Albertan politicians on his passing.

Lougheed served as premier from 1971 until his retirement in 1985. In May 2012, the Institute for Research on Public Policy had a panel of 30 judges that selected him as the best Canadian premier since 1971, receiving 21 of 30 possible first-place finishes.

That result shows how highly Lougheed was thought of across the country, a fitting tribute to a man credited with helping bring Alberta onto the national stage.

During his tenure, he faced off with Pierre Elliot Trudeau over the National Energy Policy, declaring that the federal government had moved into Alberta's living room.

He's known for standing up for provincial rights over their resources and that helped drive his fight when he went head to head against Trudeau again over the Constitution, a role he considered one of his most important.

"Of all the things we did, I think the most important one was that we succeeded with regard to the Constitution in making sure that Trudeau's efforts to make it into a unitary state, federally dominated, did not succeed," he told The Globe and Mail in an interview last year.

There's much in his legacies, both political and personal, to be admired and inspired by.

Lougheed's biography shows us that one can be both academically and athletically inclined. He earned a law degree and played for the Edmonton Eskimos. He brought home an MBA from Harvard and even spent a summer working for an oil company.

He's remembered for his door-knocking, his ability to recall names and his positive attitude.

As politicians and others across Canada share their memories of Lougheed, one attribute stands out – that he could disagree with people and parties without getting personal. He's been described as a gentleman by many, including former prime minister Jean Chrétien.

Perhaps one of the best memorials Albertans and Canadians can offer one of the most beloved premiers in Canadian history is to emulate him in his focus on the positive and offer admiration and politeness to those we disagree with.

Commentary

Having a say must be made worthwhile

The Redford government has announced plans it says will give ordinary Albertans a meaningful say in setting boundaries on provincial spending, saving and infrastructure funding.

DAN
SINGLETON

The 'Dollars and Sense' consultations will include the gathering of public input through online surveys and at a series of panel discussions. "It's important to hear what all Albertans have to say on how they want their government to manage the province's finances and savings," said Kyle Fawcett, associate minister of finance.

"I hope people take the opportunity to share their opinions about how we can shape our province's future prosperity."

A website, www.dollarsand-sense.alberta.ca, has been set up to give residents a chance to review information and provide comments on when the province should save, whether a dedicated account for infrastructure should be created, and what the Alberta Heritage Trust Fund should be used for.

The deadline for online submissions is October 31. A report summarizing the results from both the online survey and discussions at expert panels will be released later in the fall.

Also starting next month the government will be conducting public sessions across the province to gather resident input on priorities for the 2013 provincial budget.

The Wildrose official opposition says that to be truly worthwhile this latest round of consultations must include a commitment to "end wasteful spending that puts core social programs at risk and that will rescue Alberta's Heritage Fund from its current neglected state."

"We've seen this routine before where the government has a pre-determined decision and fans out across the province to have invite-only closed-door consultations," says Wildrose finance critic Rob Anderson.

"It's time to have a real open and transparent process that helps Alberta save for the future instead of maintaining the status quo of big uncontrolled spending and ongoing deficit budgets that put the sustainability of core programs at risk."

Of course this new consultation project is nothing new in Alberta. Premier Redford's predecessors have all conducted similar public opinion gathering projects over the years – in some cases the input was implemented into government plans and in others it was essentially ignored.

Whether this latest project will end up being more like the former than the latter remains in Premier Redford's hands.

The government says these 'Dollars and Sense' consultations will give Albertans a meaningful opportunity, as Minister Fawcett says, to "shape our province's future prosperity."

West Central residents are encouraged to take part in this consultation project – and hopefully in the end the Redford Tories will make it worthwhile by taking at least some of the resident input to heart.

Project Roret out to change the world

CATHY JACKSON

What does it take to change the world?
Where do we start and why should we?
Why be concerned about what happens halfway around the world or even in our backyard?

We have enough problems in our own lives. What can one person do anyway?

It's actually interesting what one person can do. One person can inspire millions.

Take Mahatma Gandhi or Martin Luther King Jr. for example. But they are extraordinary people, you say?

OK, let's look at Rosa Parks then. All she did was decide that she had enough and would not move to the back of the bus. That action was one of the catalysts for change in the civil rights movement in America.

Sometimes all that is needed is to take one small step.

There is a misconception that exists in the world that an ordinary person is not powerful enough to change the world. What I think most people forget is that you are not alone.

There is a tipping point in all action where if enough people join you taking these small steps, huge leaps are made.

We are all connected in this world. We need to stop waiting for someone else to do something. What if it was you that everyone was waiting for?

I have started this column to inform and hopefully inspire people to reach out to their brothers and sisters to change their world.

I am working with the Chinook Winds Christian Centre to drill a well, build a school and public health clinic, and develop economic initiatives in the village of Roret in Kenya.

I want to do this column to show how a small community can rise up and change a corner of the world.

I believe there are leaders in this community. If, by our actions, we touch them, who else can they touch in their own community, their nation, or even the world?

Join me on the journey to see what is possible when you just decide to act and move a mountain one stone at a time.

Cathy Jackson's columns will be appearing in the Review periodically, updating her efforts with Project Roret. When she leaves for Kenya later in the year, she will be sending back updates as to what the team is doing there as well.

Second annual Arts Festival proclaimed a big hit

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

Organizers of the Mountain View Arts Festival, held this past weekend, picked the perfect weekend for the second annual event, as the weather was accommodating and the wind, bearable.

A variety of inside and outside events were held in town Sept. 14-16 to high-light arts and culture.

Inez Kosinski, manager of the Didsbury Municipal Library and treasurer for the Didsbury Arts Society, had a tent set up and was very pleased with the event overall.

"The library has always been really involved in the arts society events and so we had arranged for projects to happen in the library during the few days as well as down here at the (Rosebud village)."

She noted that her favourite part of the weekend was interacting with the kids.

"I kind of adopted a couple of kids throughout the weekend whose parents had exhibits here," said Kosinski, "and they were bored out of their gourd until they found our table, and then they were having fun so that was great."

"The Vikings too, it's hard not to love what they do. They were just so keen to get involved in everything. It was just fun to watch them, just picture Vikings in full chain mail armour doing belly dancing, it was hilarious."

She added she is already looking forward to next year.

"Even though we didn't get a big crowd," she said, "the response from the people that were here was just so positive and so encouraging that I think that we'll probably do it again."

Arts society president Kathleen Windsor said she was happy with the event.

"It was so much fun," said Windsor. "It is a lot of work, but to see these kids hula hooping and to see the Vikings belly dancing with the belly dancers.

"Everybody thought it was great, and it was. There was so much creativity, it was absolutely worth it."

She noted how important arts and culture are.

"Any little thing that we can do to bring that awareness is so important and that's what it's all about, sharing the arts."

"To look out here and see the green grass, people smiling, and kids running around. Listening to music on one side (of the village) and seeing the art of war on the other side, it just encompassed every part, the literary arts and the visual arts."

She noted that the museum and the quilt show at the train station were highlights for her.

"It was always packed at the train station," she said.

"I went in one time and there was a whole slew of people sitting, watching the movie, I think its called Nobody's Child, and they were engrossed, they stayed for the entire 40-50 minute movie because the story is just so engaging."

She said the thing she enjoyed the most was watching people enjoy the attractions.

Joel Windsor, who was the MC for the Calgary Stampede stage, came up from High River for the event and was also happy with the result.

"It was pretty inspiring how everything ended getting set up," said Windsor. "Everybody got a chance to see the stage, nobody got in each other's way, and yet everybody was close enough to each other that they could see each other, get inspired by each other, and get a chance to work with each other."

"Just because I'm the PR guy, I got a chance to talk to so many people. A couple of the artists I knew, a couple I didn't know and just what they do. What people can do in general surprised me every day."

He noted that one of his favourite parts of the weekend was seeing the various artists on the stage, playing in the open air.

"And the Vikings, people who not just act, but live and breathe it. That kind of gives you a new idea of what theatrics can be, and there was just no end of really cool things and really cool people to meet."

Bill Anthony, a vendor at the artisan village, enjoyed the turnout.

"What I appreciated was meeting so many interesting and interested people who asked some very intelligent questions."

Anthony was giving participants a tutorial on how to make a stained glass window.

"They were learning a lot about the art form and gained a better appreciation for it," he said.

Council decides not to take over museum

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

Town council has deliberated over taking over ownership of the museum and has come to the conclusion that the best option is to leave it in the capable hands of the Didsbury Historical Society.

The society broached the issue with the town late last year.

The reason, said Mayor Brian Wittal, is that there are more grants available for the museum if it's in the hands of a not-for-profit organization such as the society.

"It comes down to grant funding potential," said Wittal. "By us owning it, it could restrict our ability to access certain funds for that facility."

It's frustrating, he said, because if the museum, for whatever reason, had to be given back to the town, "all of a sudden we're not allowed to apply for the same (grants); it doesn't make a lot of sense."

He said council may ask the town's Public Works to consider looking after the facility maintenance for the museum, such as looking after the snow shovelling and grass cutting.

"If we can do that and it helps them save some money," said Wittal, "then we're going to look at that."

Wittal said it is a definite option if there are extra funds available, but if it means extra staffing, it would not be a viable option.

Another decision that the museum will be making soon is whether or not to hire a manager for the building.

Frankie Kelly, current volunteer manager of the museum, said the historical society is seriously considering that option.

"You can only do so much with volunteers," she said, comparing the issue to sports teams who switch coaches each year.

"So they aren't out to do damage to the building, but every year, like a new soccer coach who doesn't know what happened in previous years, they don't know the history."

She noted the museum has a great team of dedicated volunteers, but in order to keep continuity, the historical society has come to the conclusion that they need a part-time, paid manager.

"It's not that the young people won't help us," she said, "but they have to make a living, and so we need to pay a fair salary and start with part-time. They've got to be treated fairly and paid fairly; we can't say 'we can pay you 'til December and then it's all up in the air.'"

"Right now, we start

January with nothing and it's really amazing to do a budget when you start with nothing."

"But when it comes to hiring somebody, they need to know that if they come and they work for us, that they're going to be treated fairly and that their job is secure."

The museum fundraises every year, but Kelly indicated one of the problems is there is no consistent, committed funding. The museum does get funding from the government, but it is impossible to budget for, because the society doesn't know if it has the funding until it is approved.

However, the museum is doing fairly well, said Kelly. Many of the maintenance issues have been sorted out, and the recently added elevator has allowed wider access.

The next project that the society has in mind is to get the sidewalks re-poured, as the current ones are in disrepair on the west side of the building.

"But if the cement isn't done this year nothing's going to change, and the same with the bathroom," said Kelly. "We always have to keep enough money for our furnace, because we never know when that might give out, but other than that, our main thing is to keep it clean and attractive."

She said town officials have been very supportive and that they support the society however they can including changing the flags once in a while. "It's not that they don't want to fund it, there's only so much money to go around."

"We pay to have our grass done, we pay to have our sidewalks shovelled, we have cleaners come in once a month, and that's all we can afford. Again, we don't spend money we don't have."

Polyjesters get good response

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

The Polyjesters played to an appreciative crowd at Didsbury High School last Saturday night and received a standing ovation at the end of the show.

Annie Loades, a museum volunteer who saw the show held in conjunction with Mountain View Arts Festival, said the band did a marvellous job.

"The fellow on the bass was the leader," said Loades, "and he did all the talking and so forth. He was humorous and he did a very good job of introducing his cohorts in this band."

She added that one of the things that stood out to her about the show was the band member who played the clarinet and the saxophone. "Wow, he was good."

The band members all took up singing throughout the night, with the last song standing out the most.

"When the dad (Mr. Valleau) got up and sang with his son at the very end, he brought tears to a lot of people's eyes. It was just a beautiful song. He sounded just like Louis Armstrong and with his son and him doing the duet. I'm getting goose pimples just thinking about what they did onstage, that's how good they were."

She said the audience enjoyed the show, which gave the band a standing ovation.

"And Kathleen Windsor did a fantastic job of the whole thing," said Loades. "Kathleen worked tirelessly, I don't know how that girl did it."

"She's so far ahead that I think she's catching up with herself, she's just fabulous. And we're all privileged to work with her."

The warm-up act for the show was put on by the Calgary Improv Guild. They included the audience and put on a hilarious show, exhibiting some of the amazing abilities they have honed in their art.

Council allows Tri-Community Transit to continue in town

BY KEVIN VINK
Review Staff

Didsbury has given the Tri-Community Transit program permission to keep the pilot project operating in town.

Mayor Brian Wittal said program officials, who had previously asked council for $5,000, has found the funding to cover the costs and approached the town to ask if they would let it keep running.

"So we said fine, not a problem," said Wittal. "We were giving them our support to continue past what the mandate of the (pilot project) was. In order to go beyond that, they needed to get the permission and support of all involved."

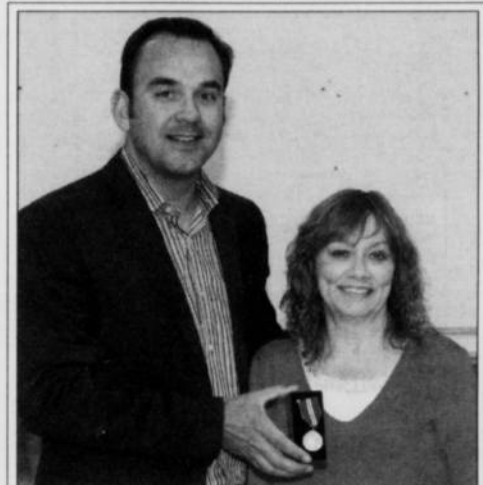

He said one of the issues is that it doesn't seem like locals are using the service very much.

The bus travels to Carstairs, Cremona and Didsbury, as well as Calgary and Airdrie, but Didsburians don't seem to have warmed up to the idea yet, which is why the town decided not to help fund the project, said Wittal.

However, he said he is not entirely opposed to the idea of funding the project if program officials decide to run it for another year.

"What we need from them for next year is a proposed budget, if they plan to do it for another year, and what they are going to need for support for funding to make it happen."

JUBILEE AWARD - Kathleen Windsor received the Queen's Diamond Jubilee Medal for service within the community. Three Didsbury RCMP were also awarded with the prestigious medal: Sgt. Jeff Jacobson, Cpl. Warren Wright, and Cst. Jason DeCoste, who has moved away from town since his nomination.

JENKINS, Anne Muir (Morton)

Anne Jenkins passed away on Sunday, September 9th, 2012 at her Aspen Ridge Lodge home in Didsbury. She lived a wonderful and long life to age 100. Her parents emigrated from Scotland in the early 1900s and Anne was born May 5, 1912 at the Calgary General Hospital. At age 2 she moved with the family to a farm just west of Didsbury, a farm that remains with the Morton family today. With her 4 brothers, she enjoyed the farm life and her horse, Lady, riding her the three miles to school every day. After schooling in Didsbury, she attended Garbutt Business College in Calgary and, as fate would have it, began work with a Calgary stock brokerage firm in 1929, just months before the stock market crash and the subsequent onset of the Great Depression. With the closure of the firm by 1931 she returned to Didsbury to help on the farm and then went to work at the Crystal Dairy in Didsbury during the 1930s.

Married during the Second World War, she initially resided in Calgary with her husband, David Jenkins, while he worked in a war-related industry. After the war, they returned to Didsbury to raise their family. She worked for many years at the Mountain View County Office, retiring in the late 1970s. Involving herself in community life, she was a longtime member of the United Church Women and the IOOE and a Life Member of St. Hilda's Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star.

An avid reader and one who kept up on the full range of news and events, from local to international, she received home delivery of the Calgary Herald continuously from 1947 until the Herald discontinued that service in Didsbury a few years ago. A softball player in her youth, she was a life-long golfer, playing the game into her 90s. Ever a sports fan, she followed the highs and not so highs of the Calgary Flames, watching the games faithfully on television or listening on radio. Gardening was another passion and her yard always featured varied and colourful floral displays.

Friends were valued and she took pride in her family, finding her long life a particular blessing in being able to see firstly her grandchildren and then great-grandchildren grow and flourish. Those who knew her saw someone who was invariably positive and pleasant, uncomplaining and exceedingly gracious. She was self-reliant and independent, living in her own home until age 95. In 2007 she moved into the Aspen Ridge Lodge where she received wonderful care until her passing.

She was predeceased by her parents, William and Marion, brothers Hugh, Thomas, William and John, her husband David (1999) and in 2008, her daughter Sharon Israelson. She is survived by her son Robert, his wife Pat and son-in-law Ernie Israelson, by her grandchildren: Tara Israelson and husband Dennis; Brett Israelson, wife Pam, great-grandchildren, Hailey, Payton and Bree; Christopher Israelson and wife Stacey; Jill Woods, husband Josh, children Brennan, Mira, Isla and Adriana; Roberta Roos, husband Treavor and Ocean, River and Reef; David Jenkins, wife Lindsey, great-grandchild Emma; Christine Jenkins; and by sisters-in-law Dorothy Jenkins of Calgary and Pat Jenkins of Edmonton.

Funeral services will be held on Monday, September 17, 2012 at 2:00 PM at Knox United Church in Didsbury. Arrangements are entrusted to Mountain View Funeral Chapels. Condolences may be forwarded to the family through www.mountainviewfuneralchapel.com. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made toward the Aspen Ridge Lodge at 1100A, 20th Avenue, P.O. Box 399, Didsbury AB T0M 0W0.

HOUSEMAN, Shirley

Shirley Houseman of Didsbury passed away on Tuesday, September 11, 2012 at the age of 82 years. Shirley is lovingly remembered by her husband, Bernie, of 59 years; children Wayne (Tracy), Sandy, Deborah (Bruce); grandchildren Billy and Trevor; great-grandson Devin and longtime friend and sister she never had, Peggy Burns. Shirley was active in the community and enjoyed her card games. A Celebration of Shirley's Life will be held at College Green Clubhouse, 1603 - 20 Avenue, Didsbury, AB on Tuesday, September 18 at 2:00 pm. In lieu of flowers, donations in Shirley's memory may be made to Tails to Tell, Box 1516, Crossfield, AB, T0M 0S0. Messages of condolence may be left for the family at www.myalternatives.ca.

SHERICK

Kenneth Norman Sherick of Didsbury, beloved husband of Verla, passed away on September 10, 2012 at the age of 82 years. Ken was born at his home in the Waterloo district west of Carstairs, the second child of Verdo and Verdella Sherick. With his older sister, Lois, and younger brother, Ormand, he grew up on the family farm, taking over the milking operation when he married Verla in June of 1953. When back problems necessitated a change of occupation, they left the farm and moved to Didsbury where they ran Sherick's Fashions and began the ambulance service in the County of Mountain View. Later they opened the K & W Drive Inn, continuing to operate the ambulance service and work at Mountain View Funeral Chapels and later, Heartland Funeral Services. Ken was involved in the Zion Evangelical Church, faithfully playing the organ and directing the choir for over 40 years. Under his direction, Christmas Eve services became an important part of the community Christmas celebrations. Ken's faithful service in the community impacted many lives and he will be missed. Ken is survived by his loving wife, Verla; daughters Heather (Ernie) Steckly and Darlene (Mike) Jones; grandsons Warren (Michelle) and Matthew Steckly; and great-grandson, Dean Matthew Steckly; a large extended family and many friends. Ken was predeceased by his parents, niece Colleen (Sherick) Archer, sister Lois, brother Ormand and most recently nephew Brian Pollock. Funeral services were held Saturday, September 15, 2012 at 11:00 a.m. at the Zion Evangelical Missionary Church, Didsbury with Richard Pahl officiating. Memorial tributes may be made directly to Didsbury Emergency Services (c/o Didsbury & District Fire Department), the Rosebud Health Foundation, Didsbury or charity of one's choice. Heartland Funeral Services Ltd. Olds entrusted with arrangements. 403-507-8610 www.heartlandfuneralservices.com
